Llamas

Llamas are large animals that were originally from South America. As they are domesticated, they can be found all around the world. In the wild they are very social and like to live in packs of up to 20 llamas.

Llamas are related to camels but they don't have a hump. However, they do spit like camels when feeling threatened or angry! Another way they are like camels is they are very stubborn and can be used to carry heavy loads for humans.

Llamas are covered in wool and this is harvested by shearing in order to make ropes, rugs and fabrics. The llama wool can be many colours – black, grey, brown or white – and sometimes in patterns! Llamas can be divided into two groups – those with short hair and those with medium.
